Only in some exceptional cases is he lost. [e]- Apocope does not have too much stability and tends to akopt, although in some cases it is also preserved. [i]- open open spoken Latin becomes e (legit case> leget) Long finale also puts e in the final position (illis >thees >les). The open tonic has already been pronounced as e. In vulgar Latin, then came apheresis e. All palatal vouches in the final position will give [e]. <!- [if !supportLists]->v <!- [endif]->Jueves> IOVIS <!- [if !supportLists]->v <!- [endif]->Donde > DE + ONDE (Latin UNDE). <!- [if !supportLists]->v 1.1.3. <!- [endif]->Continuous rounds in the final position: In Latin before romance, you could distinguish between open and closed, but not between open and closed. Pruning we have: either open or closed and open. Open u was pronounced or. <!- [if !supportLists]->v <!- [endif]->Servum: M was not pronounced is from a very old time. This word was pronounced [servo]. In the 19th century, he was beginning to pronounce with ditiongation: [servant]. As for SERVOS, it is preserved because it is closed or closed in the final position is always maintained. <!- [if !supportLists]->v <!- [endif]->Time: This or the end was not at its source. This word comes from TEMPUS, a neutral singular nominating. The word we hold is not etymological because the finale has been lost, open u has resulted in closed or closed and e has diptongado.
